Large Audience Grooms Mrs. Ellis the Phenologist.

TWO MATCHES WERE MADE

Love, Courtship and Marriage, With a Little Mixture of Jealousy and Divorce Make Up a Recreation Which is Enjoyed.

Mrs. Jean Morris Ellis delighted a large audience in the Auditorium last evening, when she lectured on the absorbing topic of "Love, Courtship and Marriage." The lecturer does not pretend to set the world upside down by any new theory, but she aims by a full and free talk on the subjects named to give people an insight into the phenologically correct way of arriving at a true method of settling matters in which foolish ideas too often replace calm judgment. She points out how much misery may be avoided and real happiness obtained.

It was perhaps the most interesting lecture that she has yet given here. "Before marriage," she said, "people are often more or less deceitful, practice a sort of stage acting, and are not at all themselves. They display every artifice they think captivating, concealing their own characters, and assuming others that do not belong to them. The young man is mainly forbearing, generous to a fault, deeply affectionate and thoughtful, while the young lady is sweet-tempered, truthful, devoted, and very affectionate. Each seems suited, and apparently made for each other, so they marry. Some girls marry for a home, some for wealth, and others because they want to see themselves arrayed in the customary bride's dresses with orange blossoms and veil. Their thought carries them no farther than the present. They do not look into the distant future, and so, in many cases, their happiness is wrecked through their own thoughtlessness. It often happens that the honeymoon is scarcely over before domestic troubles begin. One by one, the faults and defects in each other's characters are revealed, until both find out that they have been greatly mistaken, and eventually learn to hate each other.

"How is it that so many women who have taken such pride and pains in their personal appearance as well as their own homes before entering matrimony, afterwards become so neglectful of their appearance? After taking great pains to secure a husband she thinks, 'well, I have captured him, and there is nothing more to be done. It does not matter how I look,' when it should be a matter of great importance that she should be attractive in her person as well as in manner. It is so much easier to catch a man than to keep it. If women, and men also, were as assiduous to please their husbands and wives, as they are to please their lovers, there would be more happiness and contentment in married life."

Mrs. Ellis also explained the means of telling the signs of love in head and face, explaining courtship, wrong and right, and also told how to manage a mother-in-law, which was certainly admirable advice, and created much amusement.

After the lecture chairs were placed on the stage and the young ladies—Miss Eardley and Miss Sawyer—were nominated to go forward and be mated by two young men from the audience. This was a case of scientific matchmaking. What the result of the match will be is only a matter of conjecture. Mrs. Ellis walked through the audience, and after a close inspection of the marriageable young men present, eventually selected Attorney Walsh and a Mr. Turner. She paired Miss Eardley with Mr. Walsh, and Miss Sawyer with Mr. Turner. She said that the eyes of Mr. Walsh were blue, but they could easily be black, and, except for a slight faint-heartedness on his part, the couple were admirably fitted for each other.

The other pair are said to have fallen in love with each other while on the stage, and Mrs. Ellis is prepared to guarantee that they possess all the necessary qualifications that go to make up a happy married life.

SOME LOCKE PUGILISM

Fight Took Place at Anaconda Park Last Evening.

IT WAS WON BY LA FONTISE

After Three Preliminary Bouts La Fontise All But Knocks Out Cavanaugh of Chicago—He Will Make a Tour of the Coast.

A crowd of nearly 400 sportively inclined people gathered at the pavilion in the Anaconda park last evening to witness a go between Mose La Fontise of this city and Tom Cavanaugh of Chicago. The crowd assembled before 8 o'clock and the time before the main event of the evening was occupied with several preliminary bouts by local boxers.

A negro known as the "Black Prince" walked all around another colored man named Wilson in a three-round bout. These were followed by two youngsters, Rudolph Landreville and Joe Bracken, who went at each other with considerable zest. Tom Burns, an old-time fighter, and Jack La Fontise, a brother of Mose, then entertained the crowd with a three-round go in which some good sparring was done. After this bout Burns challenged any man in Montana to fight at his weight (165 pounds) for $500.

The event of the evening was the next in order. At 10:30 o'clock La Fontise stepped into the ring and a minute later was followed by Cavanaugh. A Mr. Sullivan was agreed upon as referee and Dick Myers as official timer. La Fontise was seconded by Professor Langdon and his brothers, Louis and Jack La Fontise. Tony Harris held the watch in this corner. Cavanaugh's seconds were William McTaggart, Ed Sweeney and S. H. Griffith and timekeeper, J. P. Row.

Before the men shook hands the referee announced that the bout was to be a 10-round go for points, the winner to receive a gold watch.

The first round was tame, the men sizing each other up. During the latter part of the round the men came together and La Fontise landed two left hooks, one of which staggered his opponent. Cavanaugh did not lose the count.

Round 2—This round opened lively and for a while it looked as if the Anaconda boy would literally eat his man up. Stiff punches in the nose, mouth and stomach succeeded each other almost too fast to keep track of. Only twice did Cavanaugh get back at La Fontise in this round, once in the ribs and another on the jaw, but neither did any damage.

Round 3—Cavanaugh rushed at his man and La Fontise ducked a vicious left swing. La Fontise landed right on the ribs and left on the jaw. Cavanaugh landed on body. La Fontise caught Cavanaugh a left hook on jaw. Cavanaugh stopped a hot left. La Fontise landed on the mouth and followed with a punch below the ribs. Cavanaugh got in a right on the jaw. The men clinched and both fell.

Round 4—Considerable fighting characterized this round. Cavanaugh landed a few times, but La Fontise had the best of the round, which he closed with a hard punch in the stomach.

Round 5—This round came near being fatal for Cavanaugh. He was hit by a left hook on the jaw, which he did not come up comparatively fresh, and after a little cautious leading, mixed up rather lively. La Fontise sent in a number of punishing blows, and only got two in return, and they were hardly less. Cavanaugh looked weak as the round drew to a close, and it looked very much as if the going saved him. La Fontise drew first blood in this round.

Round 6—This round ended the business. La Fontise sailed in to finish his man, but Cavanaugh, while unable to do much damage, showed the terrific punishment better than expected. Near the close of this round the men mixed up, and both were thrown against the ropes. The crowd grew excited and noisy and some claimed that La Fontise had fouled Cavanaugh. The foul was not allowed by the referee. The going sounded, and Cavanaugh, instead of going to his corner, declared he would not go on and was taken out of the ring. This was probably true, for it certainly looked as if La Fontise would finish him in another round. The referee then announced his decision, giving the fight to La Fontise.

La Fontise has fought a great number of battles and is as yet undefeated. Before last night's go the general opinion was that the Anaconda lad had met his match, but in spite of this La Fontise money went begging at odds of 5 to 3.

Professor Langdon, a well-known athlete and trainer, has arranged to take La Fontise to San Francisco for the purpose of meeting some of the fighters down in that great sporting center. La Fontise is especially anxious to meet Dick Case, a lad who whipped Jackson in this city last year and who has made a great reputation on the coast during the past few months. La Fontise will fight from 126 to 140 pounds and will go against any man in California of that weight. He has backing to the extent of $5,000.

SERIOUS CASE OF ASSAULT.

An Ugly Wound Inflicted With a Stick of Cordwood.

Phil Treacy was accused of assault in the first degree in Judge Donohue's court yesterday upon the person of P. P. O'Donnell, a prospector.

O'Donnell complains that Treacy hit him over the head with a stick of cordwood, inflicting a very serious wound. O'Donnell was on his way to the country when, about two miles east of the city, he was held up by Treacy and asked for a half gallon of alcohol which he had. O'Donnell refused to give up the alcohol and the assault was committed. A man named Jack Furey was with Treacy when the assault took place.

O'Donnell swore out a warrant, which was executed by Constable J. J. Walsh. The trial of the case was fixed for Saturday at 10 a. m.

What Is Social Position?

From the September Atlantic.

People who belong to what is called the best society in large towns or cities are usually quite conscious of the fact that society is graded just as minutely beneath them as it is in the plane with which they are familiar. But, in fact, every individual in a complex society, down to the beggar in the street or the tramp on the highway, has his social position. The city missionaries of Boston report, with some astonishment, that a great social gap exists between the penitentiary on the sidewalk and the peripatetic organ grinder, and that the children of the former are forbidden by their parents to play with the children of the latter. It is indeed asserted, and with considerable truth, that mere wealth is a passport to the best society; but this is less true in America than it is in England, and less true in Australia than it is in America. The reason is that in England the best society is a state institution and is therefore more sure of its position and can afford to be less exclusive—to be more hospitable not only to wealth, but also to intellect and originality—than is possible for the corresponding class in a democratic country. Moreover, even from the most aristocratic point of view, a good reason can be given for accepting wealth as a substitute for birth. The fact that a man has made much money implies, as a rule, that both his mind and his physical strength are far above the average. From what better stock, then, could the best society be recruited? This, of course, is not the motive of the rich man's reception in good society; it might better be described as nature's reason for permitting the anomaly.

His Circus Days Gone By.

From the Nebraska State Journal.

A Lincoln attorney who is a church member was figuring on taking his son to the circus to see the animals this year, as has been his custom in the past ever since the youngster has been large enough to appreciate the menagerie's attractions. The son is 15 years old, and he recently announced to his father that he was big enough to go alone. The father was taken considerably aback for he had not counted on being deprived of the excuse for going this year that he had always used before.

"Why do you want to go alone?" the father asked.

"I don't know," replied the boy in a reluctant manner.

"Yes you do," said his father. "You would not tell me that you want to go alone without a reason."

"Well, papa," he said, "I want to stay out in the animal tent longer than he has not yet heard the last of the incident."

A Vindictive Reporter.

A reporter on a paper wrote the following account of his hated rival's marriage: "The bride was in a beautiful white lavender silk dress, with orange wreath and six-button No. 5 kind gloves, slightly burst in the thumb. The groom was as straight as a black cloth suit constructed by the best tailor could make him, and as well in the face as was consistent with a pair of boots two sizes too small, and a No. 12 collar encircling his manly 16½ inch neck. Fortunately before the ceremony was over the restraining button flew off and saved him from strangulation."
